

Summer School
“Justice, Inequality and Discrimination”,
September 5th to 9th, 2022

The summer school will address questions of economic inequality and social discrimination in Europe. We shall discuss contemporary philosophical accounts of social well-being and justice. Beyond philosophy, we will take a fresh look into the challenges of diversity and inequality also from the perspectives of economics and the social sciences. Concerning economic inequality, our discussion will focus on theories of distributive justice that put ‘basic needs’ (Frances Stewart), ‘basic capabilities’ (Amartya Sen & Martha Nussbaum), or ‘basic goods’ (John Rawls) center stage. Concerning discrimination, we shall examine familiar ideas of ‘unfair disadvantage’. How well do received conceptions of discrimination in terms of ‘vulnerable groups’ and ‘disparate treatment’ cope with emerging phenomena of social ‘super-diversity’ and computerized data mining and statistical discrimination?

Students who want a head start may wish to take a closer look at the following books:

- Amartya K. Sen, The Idea of Justice, Cambridge MA 2009.
- François Bourguignon, The Globalization of Inequality, Princeton 2017.
- Virginia Eubanks, Automated Inequality. How High-tech Tools Profile, Police, and Punish the Poor, New York NY 2018.
- Stijn Oosterlynck, Divercities: Understanding Super-Diversity in Deprived and Mixed Neighbourhoods, Bristol 2020.

12 students from Cologne and 12 international students will be chosen to participate. We aim to have a diverse group that discusses issues of justice, inequality and discrimination from a variety of perspectives. Beyond the general discussions, students will discuss and prepare individual topics in small groups. By the end of the week, the results of the groups will be recorded in the form of a podcast. Furthermore, several social activities are planned to explore Cologne and the University of Cologne (See program on page 3).

Participants of the Summer School are required to organize their outward and return journey themselves. Travelling expenses shall be partially reimbursed upon submission of relevant receipts.

The Summer School will take place in-person in Cologne. To apply, please contact Mila Evers (mila.evers@uni-koeln.de).
